"Bootie Pies": The Must Have Shoe You Didn't Know You Needed

Friday, 11/20/2009 at 10:04 AM

Comments (29)

I confess, I suffer from a rare but serious disease called Extreme Shoe Lust. When a gorgeous pair of pumps or oxfords gets in my line of vision, my palms get sweaty, my heart beat quickens, and I have a weird reflex that causes me to reach immediately for my wallet. The latest pair to get my attention?

BOOTIE PIES! I was reading an old issue of New York Magazine last night before bed, and I came across an ad in the back (buried betwixt offers of model-quality romantic introductions and promises to banish spider veins forever) for these clever little shoes. To the naked eye, they're just regular (but cute) suede boots. But to the dedicated Slave to Fashion or beauty queen, they're a genius gift from the solution-looking-for-a-problem gods.

I can't tell you how many times in my extensive pedicure history I've a.) Picked clear polish just so I wouldn't have to wait around for a thick color to dry b.) Run my errands in flip flops in the middle of November just so I wouldn't smudge my paint job c.) Nearly lost my mind sitting under that dryer. And then I saw Bootie Pies--cozy "pedicure boots" that let you get in and out of the salon without waiting around for ages for your toes to dry. I know, I know, it seems a little ridiculous and extravagant and silly but...also kind of completely genius, right!? And they're not bad looking, either, which means you can totally wear them to places other than the salon.

They're pricey ($128 for the black or brown suede, $98 for slate gray or bluish purple), but they're made from real suede and leather and look like they'd really stand up to a little New York City sidewalk beating. Call me crazy, but I think I've just found the first item for my Chanukkah wish list! Have any of you girls ever tried Bootie Pies? Are you as impatient as I am when it comes to waiting for your mani and pedi to dry? Does this seem like a smart solution to you? Discuss!

The shoe goddesses have sent us these abominations for to tempt us... but we must be strong, and resist their fugly allure.
